

Ongoing training

Life does not stop learning. Climb over the bulk, becoming a man who learns and grows much faster than anyone else. The fact is that today most of your knowledge and skills remain relevant for approximately two-and-a-half years. This means that in five years much of what you know today will be obsolete or not appropriate time.

To survive and thrive tomorrow, in our rapidly changing world, you must continuously improve their knowledge and skills not only to stay, but to stay ahead of the curve. The highest paid 10% of Americans read materials related to their field of activity 2-3 hours every day just to stay level. They continually take in information from every possible source. As we move with hypervelocity in the information age, leaders in every business realize that they need to be on the crest of a wave of change or it will devour them.

You have a very simple choice: you can be the master of change or you may be a victim of change. And it is basic. Your goal is to become a master of change, continuously trying to get better and better at its activities.

To a lifetime to learn, college essay help observe 3 simple rules:

1. Every day at least half an hour to read materials that are relevant to your field of activity or motivation. For example, books with Brian Tracy – author of books on efficiency, time management, leadership and business development. Reading is to the mind has the same effect and necessity of that exercise for the body. If you daily read for about an hour, over the time of UVI will be able to read approximately 1 book per week, 50 books per year. And read 50 in a year of books will lead to the fact that in the next 10 years you will read 500 books. Not bad, huh? Constant reading of materials that are relevant to your sector will make you one of the most knowledgeable and highly paid professionals in their profession in a very short time.
2. Listen to audio in your car, while you are eating from one place to another. The average car owner sits behind the wheel 500 to 1,000 hours per year. The equivalent is as if you were in the car from three to six months of 40-hour weeks. According to the rules of the University of North Carolina, this is equivalent to one or two full academic semesters at the University. You can become one of the most knowledgeable and the most competent professionals in their profession, in the car listening to educational audio programs, not music.
3. Visit each potentially available to you the training course or seminar. The highest paid people I know are traveling from one end of the country to another to attend an intensive two - or three-day seminar that can help them in their careers. A worthwhile book, audio program or seminar can give you to an idea or opinion, which will allow you to save many years of hard work. From today start to aspire to new knowledge.

From this conclusion there is no better way to get more and accelerate your career than to become knowledgeable and the most competent expert in his profession.
